A SINGULAR REUNION.—In 1847, a young physician, who had just graduated from the Missouri State University, and returned to his home in Illinois to practice his profession, led to the altar a lady who had won his love. The young physician, with that professional order which bears so brightly in the hearts of all students on his return home, prepared a "subject" or rather for discussion, by denouncing the village grave yard. By some means this fact became known, and a warrant was issued for his arrest and placed in the hands of an officer to serve, which he did a few moments after the marriage ceremony was performed. The crime being a felony, the bridegroom's position may readily be imagined to have been extremely unenviable, and the prospect of a prison cell being anything but agreeable, he determined to make his escape. The officer having granted him the privilege of saying a few words in private to his bride, he retired with her to a room, laid her face, jumped from the window and escaped. He was pursued for many days, but finally managed to elude his pursuers, and settled in Missouri. A year later he wandered into New Mexico, and from thence, in the course of a few years, he found his way into California. During his wanderings he had fallen to correspond with his wife, and she, believing him dead, married again. After a time he learned this fact, but determined to remain dead to her, and it was not until a few months ago he altered his determination. Determining to pick up a paper published in one of the western cities, he read an account of the death of the husband of his wife, and knowing her to be free, he wrote to her, stating that he still lived, and cherished her memory as green as when he kissed her lips in parting nineteen years ago. The wife-widow received the letter, and while she read the early love returned, and she determined to join him. Disposing of her property, she, with a daughter, twelve years of age, took passage for California, where they arrived on Thursday last, and were met on the wharf by the old husband, who conducted them to the Commodore hotel, where they remained till a license was procured and a minister married the parties, after which they proceeded to the house that had been prepared for them, and where they, on Thursday evening, entertained quite a number of friends. Truly, the incidents of real life are more startling and romantic than the wildest fancies of the romancer.—San Francisco, California.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF LIVING.—But few men die of age. Almost all die of disappointment, passion, mental or bodily toil, or accident. The passions kill men sometimes, even suddenly. The common expression, "choked with passion," has little exaggeration in it; for even though not suddenly fatal, strong passions shorten life. Strong bodied men often die young—weak men live longer than the strong, for strong men use their strength, and the weak have none to use. The latter take care of themselves, the former do not. As it is with the body, so it is with the mind and temper. The strong are apt to break, or like a candle, to "melt," the weak burn out.

The inferior in animals, which live in general regular and temperate lives, have generally their prescribed term of years. The lion lives about twenty-five to thirty; the rabbit eight. The duration of life in all these bears a similar proportion to the time the animal takes to grow to its full size. But man, of all the animals, is the one that seldom comes up to his average. He ought to live a hundred years according to his physiological law, but instead of that he scarcely reaches on the average, four times his growing period; the cat six times; and the rabbit even eight times the standard of measurement. The reason for all this is obvious. Man is not only the most irregular and the most intemperate, but the most laborious and hard-working of all animals. He is the most irritable of all animals; and there is reason to believe—though we cannot tell what an animal secretly feels—that more than any other animal man cherishes wrath to keep it warm, and consumes himself with the fire of secret reflections. Besides this, man is the only animal that makes a wide departure from those laws of nature which control life. He takes on unnatural and health destroying habits, carrying them to the verge of the grave, and clinging to them with a tenacity which yields not even to his better judgment. The lower order of animals never do this. Instinct is their guide, and the superior duration of life they enjoy is proof of the folly of man.

THE URGENT AND THE BEAUTIFUL.—The tomb of Moses is unknown; but the traveler slakes his thirst at the well of Jacob. The gorgeous palace of the wisest and wealthiest of monarchs, with the cedar and gold, and ivory, and even the great temple of Jerusalem, followed by the visible glory of the deity himself, are gone; but Solomon's reservoirs are as perfect as ever. Of the ancient architecture of the Holy City not one stone is left upon another; but the pool of Bethesda commands the pilgrims reverence at the present day. The columns of Persopolis are smouldering in the dust; but its citizens and spectators remain to challenge our admiration. The golden house of Nero is a mass of ruins; but the Aqua Claudia still pours into Rome its limpid stream. The temple of the sun at Tadmor in the Wilderness has fallen; but its turrets sparkle in its rays, as when thousands of worshippers thronged its lofty colonades. It may be that London will share the fate of Babylon, and nothing be left to mark its site save mounds of crumbling brick work. The Thames will continue to flow as it does now. And if any work of art should rise over the deep ocean of time, we may well believe that it will be neither a palace nor temple, but some vast aqueduct or reservoir, and if any name should flash through antiquity, it will be that of the man who sought the happiness of his fellow-men rather than glory, and linked his memory to some great work of national utility, or benevolence. This is the true glory which outlives all others, and shines with undying lustre from generation to generation, imparting to works something of its own immortality, and rescuing them from the ruin which overtakes the ordinary monuments of classical tradition or mere magnificence.

Suppressed Evidence.

Bill Arp Before the Reconstruction Committee—His Own Report of His Testimony.

Mr. Editor—Murder will out and so will evidence. Having seen Dan Rice's testimony before the Reconstruction Committee, I have felt a great deal of satisfaction to see that I have not been made a witness in any manner, but I am not to be let out in obscurity. Our country is the special jury, and by this business will go up fairly and completely, and therefore I will take pains to make public what I saw to do. I did a good deal more than I can put down, Mr. Editor, and at times my language was considered impudent, but they thought that it was all the better for their side, for it illustrated the rebellious spirit. I heard one of 'em say: "Let him go on—the railing passion is strong in death. He's good States evidence."

When I was put on the stand, old Boutwell swore me most fiercely and solemnly to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and I observed that he was then entertaining about a quart of double brandy, and it looked as though it had been on his stomach. Old Bow was set off on one side, with a memorandum book, getting ready to note some "garbled extracts."

Old Ironworks was Chairman, and when he nodded his Republican head, Boutwell says he, "Your name is Arp, I believe, is it?"

"So called," says I.

"You reside in the State of Georgia do you?"

"I can't say exactly," says I; "I live in Rome, right in the fork of two Injin rivers."

"In the State of Georgia," says he, fiercely.

"In a state of uncertainty about that," says I; "We don't know whether Georgia is a State or not. I would like for you to state yourself, if you know. The state of the country requires that this matter should be settled, and I will propose to state—"

"Never mind, sir," says he. "How old are you, Mr. Arp?"

"That depends on circumstances," says I. "I don't know whether to count the last five years or not. Durin' the war your folks said that a State couldn't secede, but that while she was in a state of rebellion she ceased to exist. Now you say we got out and we should get back again until 1870. A man's age has got something to do with his rights, and if we are not to vote, I don't think we ought to count the time. That's about as near as I can come to my age, sir."

"Well, sir," says he, are you familiar with the political sentiments of the citizens of your State?"

"Got no citizens yet, sir, that we know of. I will thank you to speak of us as 'people.'"

"Well, sir," says he, "I'll humor your obstinacy. Are the people of your State?"

"Don't speak of it as a State, sir, if you please. I'm on oath now, and you must excuse me for being so particular. Call it a 'section.'"

"Mr. Arp, are the people of your section sufficiently humble and repentant to come back into the Union on such terms as we may think proper to impose?"

"Not much they ain't," says I. "I don't think they are prepared for it yet. They wouldn't voluntarily go it blind against your blood. They see the rebel's flag and stain the trumps, but at the same time they don't care a darn what you do. They've become indifferent and don't care nothing about your five-fawkes business. I mean no respect to you, gentlemen, but I was sorry to tell the truth. Our people ain't a nothin' you only out of curiosity. They don't expect anything decent, or honorable, or noble from you, and they've gone to work diggin' and plowin' and raisin' boy children."

Right here the man with a memorandum scratched down a garbled extract, and old Boutwell says he; "What do you mean by that, sir? What inference do you intend?"

"I'm startin' facts," says I. "You must draw your own inferences. They are a 'raisin' boy children. Any harm about that? Can't a man raise boy children? Perhaps you'd like to amend the Constitution and step it. Old Pharoah tried to stop it among the Israelites, but it didn't pay. He finally caught the drosopy in the Red Sea. We're raisin' boy children for the fun of it. They are a good thing to have in the house, as Mrs. Toole's would say."

"Mr. Arp, are not the feelings of your people very bitter toward the North?"

"I beg your pardon, sir, but you'll have to split the question, or else I'll split the answer. Our people have a very high regard for honorable men, brave men, noble-hearted men, and there's a heap of 'em North, sir, and there's a heap of widows and orphans that we're sorry for; but as for like them Radical party, they look upon 'em like they was heyns scratches up the dead for a livin'! It's as natural to hate 'em as it is to kill a snake. It is utterly impossible for me to tell the strength and length and height, depth and breadth of their contempt for that party. They look upon a Radical as—as—as—as—as—as—as—as—a legger on horseback—a hazzard sailin' round a dead eagle—a suck-egg dog creepin' up to the tail of a dead lion. They talk about hirtin' Boutwell to abuse 'em, to use language on 'em like he did a few years ago when he spoke against Pryne. If they do, he'll spit 'em all over, and slime 'em and slobber 'em about right, and it will stick for the pores are open and their morals spongy. I'd like to stand off about ten rods and hear him spread himself. It would be worse than a squirts-gun full of cow-slop, and I have not thought would give general satisfaction."

"That's sufficient, sir," says old Boutwell.

"If it was in their power to do so would your people raise the flag?"

"Not unless they could fight the Radicals all alone, and all the world would agree to hand off. Even then there wouldn't be no fight, for we couldn't catch 'em."

"What do your people say upon the subject of negro equality?"

"They say it's a lie, sir—it don't exist by nature and it can't be practiced. Folks were not created free and equal. That may be a theoretical truth, but it's always been a practical lie. There's grades of society everywhere. There's men that I'd give the side-walk to, and there's men that give it to me. There's men that I vote, and men that vote me, and the grades go up, up, up, step by step, from my sort to Mr. Davis and Mr.
